How Would You Improve This Photo?

from page 27

center of interest. After these modifications, I think this picture would be quite dramatic and quite salable.

Athalia A. Toivonen
Sacramento, California

Tones Appropriate

The center of interest could be better dramatized by cropping at the left, right and top. The range of tones is good—they do not overwhelm the subject.

Lottie Schlamann
Fort Lauderdale, Florida

Overwhelmed

The point of interest, the children, are overwhelmed by nature. The left and bottom should be cropped.

Henrietta S. Wilson
King City, Oregon

Crop

I'd crop the blurred foreground as well as the left and the right, while leaving the top alone. This would better emphasize the focal point, the two children. A little darkening of the sky might also add to the picture.

Carl W. LaFratta, M.D.
Richmond, Virginia

Charming

This is a charming picture. I like the composition, the subject matter appeals to me, and since I almost always include too much when I photograph, I probably would have made the picture the same way. But I then would have made a second print and cropped the picture at all four sides.

Susan W.C. Bernis
Longmeadow, Massachusetts

No Reason for Being

This picture isn't even a good snapshot—no impact, no composition, no reason for being. It would be lucky to score 4 out of 15 in a competition.

Dick Scudder
Rochester, New York

Format

An 8x10 format is better suited for prints than the 2x3 format used by slidemakers and the maker of this photo. I'd crop at the top.

Anonymous

Horizontal Format

I would have done this picture differently in one of two ways. I would have increased the size of the figures by using a doubler to double the focal length of the lens or by cropping. Or I would have converted it to a horizontal format.

Anonymous

More of a Winner

I like this photo as is but it could be made more of a winner. I'd crop and darken the foreground leading to the figures. I'd also use a more contrasty paper and a warmer toned or textured paper to give the picture an oil painting effect.

Christine E. Haycock, M.D.
Newark, New Jersey
